

LATIN AMERICAN STUDIES ASSOCIATION

On September 5, 2017, Attorney General Jeff Sessions announced that the Trump administration would end the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program, which shields young undocumented immigrants from deportation and grants them temporary legal status, which allows them to work, study and contribute to their local communities. The administration's six-month "phase out" would end the DACA program on March 5, 2018. The action has created a climate of fear and uncertainty for DACA recipients and their extended families.

More than 80 percent of "Dreamers" were brought to the United States by parents from Mexico and Central America, according to the Washington Office on Latin America (WOLA). Many of them were fleeing violence and seeking a better future. Much of that violence and limited life chances is a result of U.S. foreign policy and military, economic, political and covert intervention in the region. They're here, because the United States is there.

About 1.9 million undocumented young people are eligible to apply for the DACA program. Nearly 800,000 had their request for DACA status granted in 2016. That is, nearly one million young people believed our promise that they would be safe revealing their undocumented status on the pathway to residency and citizenship, and trusted that our democracy values human and civil rights.

Of those who have DACA status, about 576,000 are enrolled in college. A full 95 percent of DACA recipients are either working or in school. The United States is their home. To further endanger their status here and deport them is wrong. Period.

In light of this situation, the Executive Council of the Latin American Studies Association (LASA), the largest professional Association in the world for individuals and institutions engaged in the study of Latin America, invokes the idea of Pan-Americanism proposed by José Martí in his 1891 essay "Nuestra América." Martí's idea inspires us to work towards the promotion of a hemispheric vision of justice, inclusion, and respect for human rights across the Americas, including in the United States, which has long insisted on human rights and U.S.-styled democracy in Latin America and the Caribbean, while not adhering to those same standards within its own borders.

The Executive Council of LASA strongly condemns the rescinding of DACA and urges Congress to act immediately to provide protections for young people and their families whose lives are disrupted and endangered.

We call on our members to contact their members of Congress to insist that they take immediate action to reverse President Trump's action and allow DACA recipients to remain in the United States.

Further, we call on Congress to pass a stand-alone DREAM ACT that would provide a path to citizenship. We further urge Congress to enact a comprehensive immigration reform policy that welcomes immigrants to our shore.

The Latin American Studies Association

Aldo Panfichi, President

Lynn Stephen, Incoming President

Joanne Rappaport, Immediate Past President

Gilbert Joseph, Past President

Patricia Tovar, Treasurer

Diego Sanchez-Ancochea, Incoming Treasurer

Claudia Ferman, Executive Council Member

Jo-Marie Burt, Executive Council Member

Angela Araujo, Executive Council Member

Ginetta Candelario, Executive Council Member

Barbara Weinstein, Executive Council Member

Daniela Spenser, Executive Council Member

Aníbal Pérez-Liñán, LARR Editor-In-Chief

Florencia Garramuno, LARC Co-Editor

Charles Walker, LASA2018 Program Co-Chair

Marianne Braig, LASA2018 Program Co-Chair